A Disaster Victim Certificate (risai shoumeisho) is a certificate showing damage to the home that is issued by the city office upon application and assessment. As shown in the table, there are six main categories, including completely destroyed and half destroyed. Many support programs are linked to the Disaster Victim Certificate. Therefore, applying for a Disaster Victim Certificate should be the start of the reconstruction process.

The higher the category of damage, the more support you can receive. If there is any doubt about the initial determination, you can apply for a re-assessment or further investigation, so please consult with the city office that issued the certificate.

When affected by flooding

Those affected by flooding or landslides should first consult the booklet 'What to do in the Event of Flooding'. It provides illustrated guidance covering everything from clearing, disinfecting and drying damaged homes, criteria for determining disaster victim certification during flooding and subsequent support schemes. Download the booklet or leaflet version using the code on the right

How should disaster waste be disposed of?

- Rubbish, recyclables and bulky waste can be disposed of via the regular collection service.
- For both dwellings and workplaces, disaster waste resulting from flooding above or below floor level may qualify for a reduction or exemption from collection fees.

※ Disaster Victim Certificate (risai shouumeisho / hisai shouumeisho) is required.

What is the miscellaneous loss deduction?

Individuals who have suffered damage to buildings, household goods, vehicles, graves, etc., due to a disaster may be eligible for reductions or exemptions on their income tax and resident tax when filing their tax return (similar to medical expenses deductions).

- This scheme is available even to those with partially but less significantly destroyed (ichibu sonkai) holding a disaster certificate
- Those with damage not covered by insurance should consult their tax office or free advisory sessions
- For household goods damage, even if the value is unknown, the National Tax Agency's valuation can be used
